
Steven C. Michael
Professor of Entrepreneurship and Strategy
University of Illinois Urbana Champaign
College of Business
1206 S. Sixth St.
Champaign, IL 61820
(217) 265-0702
fax: (217) 244-7969
smichael@illinos.edu

Presented at the 26th Annual International Society of Franchising Conference
H. Wayne Huizenga School of Business and Entrepreneurship
Nova Southeastern University
Fort Lauderdale, Florida, U.S.A.
May 17-19, 2012

Abstract

Prior research has examined why franchisors expand abroad, but no paper has empirically examined the role of franchising in the macroeconomy of developing nations. In this note, the pattern of franchising development is statistically analyzed within the context of the general economic development of Latin America. It is found that franchising follows, rather than leads, economic development. Implications for theory and policy are considered.